Police want to educate parents, teens, in light of two child porn cases

BY SYLVIA COLE
 Review Staff

Cases of child pornography being produced and distributed by teens have been cropping up in Didsbury.

Police heard two reports last month where teen girls from Didsbury were either photographing or video recording themselves naked and sharing this documentation with others. And wellness workers are saying these aren't the only incidents.

"I think it's a problem with any kids just in general with the opportunities of the technological toys. I've heard across the board basically from most of the family school wellness workers that this is an issue going on for a lot of kids," said Robbin Bowman, director of FCSS in Carstairs. Bowman sits on the board for family school wellness for Chinook's Edge School Division and said this is an issue she's hearing from wellness workers all over the school division. "It's something parents need to be aware of."

Findings from Young Canadians in a Wired World indicate 37 per cent of 11 to 12 year olds visit private and adult-only chat rooms and 66 per cent of teens 13 to 14 do. One in five children who use computer chat rooms has been approached online by pedophiles.

In the two cases reported to RCMP parents weren't aware what their child was engaging in until after it was reported to police.

One of the two cases involved sexting. A teen girl took a photo of herself on her cellphone and sent it out to a teen boy and he then texted it out to his friends. Police won't release the age of the girl, because they are concerned a specific age will relate to a specific grade and her identity could be discovered.

In the second case, a teen girl met someone in an online chat room and over the course of a year started making sexually explicit videos of herself with a webcam and sharing with the person she met in the chat room.

She eventually shared this information with a family member who brought it forward to the police and the case is now under investigation to determine who has been viewing these videos.

"I don't think there is a why (kids do this). It seems to be the more our lives become wrapped up in technology what child of 12 doesn't have a cellphone?" said Cpl. Kim Krasman with the Southern Alberta Integrated Child Exploitation Team in Calgary. "Because children are so much more in touch with technology generally speaking than their parents are, they're using it in ways their parents aren't even thinking of. ... It seems children are becoming much more sexualized at a younger age. What seems like a really bad idea to me, children don't seem to be concerned about."

See Child Porn p.15

"It was dealt with by way of stern warning and we're hoping to educate these children. It's not in the public interest to lay charges."

Jaekyun Im/Didsbury Review

Municipal council candidates, including those running for Didsbury and Mountain View County councillor and mayor positions, attended an all candidates forum at the Didsbury Complex last week.

Mayor candidates on hot seat at forum

BY SYLVIA COLE
Review Staff

Mayor Brian Wittal was in the hot seat last Wednesday night during a question and answer period of the all-candidates forum.

Residents were asked to present written questions during a 45-minute question and answer period directed at candidates running for mayor and council in Didsbury as well as county councillor candidates.

Questions for Wittal focused around tax rates, bringing in more businesses, road and drainage plans, U-turns down main street, snow removal and composting.

One submission questioned what has been done in the last three years to collect more tax from commercial sources. Wittal said now that annexation of land has been finalized they can start to work on getting more businesses into Didsbury but said some companies aren't in a hurry to relocate because of the current economy. He used the same reasoning when asked why there weren't more grocery stores in town, saying that companies aren't interested in coming to Didsbury during an economic slowdown when they already have stores set up in towns close by such as Olds and Carstairs.

"We are working on a strategy of attracting new businesses," explained Wittal when asked what council has done to bring more businesses into Didsbury. He said council needs to come up with an incentive for new businesses that doesn't hurt or affect businesses already set up in town.

People were also concerned there wasn't enough enforcement with U-turns occurring on main street and another person wanted to know if a guardrail would be put up along Dead Man's Drop. Wittal encouraged people to write down the licence plate number of people making U-turns, and said council looked into putting a guardrail in place along Dead Man's Drop but decided it was a "very expensive option that probably would not resolve the issue that somebody going too fast would really effectively stop them from going over the coulee."

Wittal defended the composting program when questioned why people that don't use the green bins have to pay for the service, explaining that it's a way to keep garbage down. He said there isn't an effective way of monitoring who uses it and who doesn't in order to determine who should pay for the service.

He also explained that the snow removal budget focuses primarily on main roads, in front of schools and hospitals and "On a year where we have a lot of snow the budget disappears fast," after being asked why people pay for snow removal but rarely see it done on their streets.

Town members questioned contender Rick Lavigne about his qualification and his platform.

"Why am I running for mayor? Because I'm a citizen just like you. I see things wrong and I think it's time for change," he said, adding that what he doesn't know he'll take upon himself to learn. He was also ribbed about a comment he made in The Review when he said "I'm not out to whack anybody." A resident asked who he would "whack" in order to pay for the skateboard park and he said it's a matter of getting the cooperation from volunteers and support from businesses.

Council candidates were asked if they had an online presence, how many new candidates had ever been to a council meeting before, and if council planned to offer taxi service for residents.

Bob Davidson explained the handibus that will drive people to various events if they call up and ask for the service, but a woman in the crowd answered back that it only runs certain days of the week and doesn't run in the evenings. Another crowd member shouted out that there are two taxi services in town and candidate Ray Anderson confirmed there is a man driving a funeral car who has been offering his services for the last year and a half.

During the final two-minute wrap-up speeches, candidates urged citizens to vote on October 18. Close to 120 people attended the all-candidates forum held in the multi-purpose room at the Didsbury Memorial Complex.

ELECTION 2010

Meet the councillor candidates

BY SYLVIA COLE
Review Staff

Donald Adams, candidate for Didsbury council, introduced himself at last week's all-candidates forum. Issues of concern for him include flooding, repairing sidewalks and streets, looking at what needs to be done with the sewer and looking into lack of youth facilities.

"We need a new perspective, someone to think outside the box and listen to you," he said that evening.

He also voiced concerns about bringing more businesses to town and being fiscally prudent with tax dollars.

Adams is a retired police officer with four children.

Ken Anderson is running for council because "we need council to pick up the slack," he said Wednesday night.

He said water and sewer issues needs to be addressed so the town can be ready for the future.

"Without it we can't attract development and businesses," he said. He said this needs to be done before the town starts to develop sites for new housing. He also had concerns over bicycle riders and suggested there needs to be more regulations in place because it's becoming a hazard for drivers.

Ray Anderson, running for council, said he wants "a council who is willing to listen to the people and be capable of understanding the problems concerning their issues."

Anderson said parks and recreation needs to be rethought so they all get looked after and the post office street needs to be a 30 zone and be monitored because "it's a high traffic area with many close calls." Anderson looks after tractor-trailer units and heavy industrial equipment. He spent 12 years in the oilfield and has knowledge of residential construction. He said his background and input will help voice people's ideas on council.

Bob Davidson is running for re-election. He has spent two terms already on council and is running again because he's concerned about the town. Davidson said he originally ran for council "to give something back to the town." He wants to keep Didsbury an attractive community to live in and to make sure council and administration spends money wisely. He said deciding where to spend the money is the hard part and a lot of projects in town can't be done without the help from volunteers.

Rick Mousseau is running for re-election. He's lived in Didsbury for 31 years and said he's been on various committees including youth justice committee and the fire department. "I believe in the community. What we do and who we are," he said Wednesday night.

Gail Nowlan is running for a second term on council. She said she's had a lot of fun on council and wants to run again.

"I want to represent you and be your voice in the community," she said last week. She's lived in Didsbury for six years and is married with three kids. She said in the previous two elections she noticed some of the concerns were the same as they are today and she wants to continue working on them, including creating more space to bring more businesses to Didsbury.

Ernie Ryckman said his past experience running on council and his business background will help achieve goals for the town.

"My previous platform was to ease the tax burden on residents. It was out of whack and still is," said Ryckman. He wants to preserve heritage land in town, complete the land use bylaw, increase communication with businesses and resolve the "bedroom mentality with people in town that do their shopping where they work." He'd also like to see an increase in communication with residents and said he will represent all age groups in town.

Peter Versluys, former councillor from 1998 to 2004, is running for council once more.

"I always knew I'd run again," said Versluys, who said he's had an ongoing desire to make a difference. He said he will be active in social issues, volunteer organizations, involved with the library and art, culture and recreational initiatives. He's lived in Didsbury for over 30 years with a social work career in the area. He's now retired and hearing encouragement from community members, has decided to run again.

Gayle Veno was not at the all-candidates forum last week but is running again for re-election. "The sewage lagoon is the number one problem," explained Veno. She said it's reaching capacity and council needs to find funding to get the expansion going.

She is also concerned about planning for future growth, making sure infrastructure projects are in place and making sure tax dollars are spent wisely. "We are trying to keep taxes as low as possible but they are our only source of revenue and we need to maintain services," she said, explaining the balance is tricky. She mentioned a need to get more commercial industry into Didsbury to help reduce the tax rate but said that would be at a cost for a small town.

She has spent two terms on council and has a background in businesses and worked for the town and Olds College.

RUNNING FOR A CAUSE - The first of hundreds of children sprint away from Ross Ford Elementary last Thursday during the Terry Fox School Run. Westglan students joined the elementary school students for their run around town, while high school students left their respective school around the same time and met up with the larger crowd downtown.

Hold applause on smoking stats: more work to be done

Fewer Albertans than ever are smoking or using other tobacco products, continuing a general decline in the number of people who are living, and dying, for the tobacco habit.

Last week Health Canada released new statistics showing that 18 per cent of residents now use tobacco, a decline of about two per cent from two years ago.

The downturn is good news for Alberta and probably a good indication that anti-tobacco use programs and policies are having the desired effect, say health-care providers.

Alberta Health says tobacco use causes the premature death of about 3,000 Albertans every year.

As such and not surprisingly, Dr. Gerry Predy, Alberta's senior medical officer of health, says the continuing decline in tobacco use is a very positive move in the right direction.

"The smoking numbers going down will mean of course that in the longer term we will see a healthier population which is really what this is all about," said Predy.

Also encouraging is the fact that Alberta is now even with the national average when it comes to tobacco use, after decades of being above the average.

The provincial government has implemented a number of high-profile anti-tobacco use measures in recent years, including a ban on workplace and public area smoking, a prohibition on the sale of tobacco products in pharmacies, and the virtual elimination of public tobacco advertising.

As well, Alberta continues to have some of the highest tobacco taxes anywhere in Canada, costs health-care providers say probably go a long way towards keeping young people in particular from taking up the habit.

While the overall decline in tobacco use is encouraging, not all the news is good news on the anti-smoking front - Health Canada says 80 per cent of all new smokers are under the age of 18.

"The combined efforts of the Alberta government and health organizations to reduce tobacco use are having the desired effect," says Tony Hudson, president of The Lung Association of Alberta.

"However we can't rest on our achievements or we could lose the momentum that took decades to achieve. We need to focus our efforts on keeping kids tobacco-free including more measures to curb tobacco marketing to youth."

The provincial government and its stakeholder partners should be applauded for the efforts that have led to the overall decline in tobacco use. However, the fight to keep young people from becoming tobacco users in the first place must be pursued with increased vigor.

In particular, wouldn't it be a good thing if the Stelmach government started actually enforcing the existing provincial law that prohibits any person under the age of 18 from having any tobacco product in his or her possession?

Roll back the clock on Bill 50

Epcor and AltaLink have filed an application to build the controversial Heartland transmission line around the southern and eastern edges of Edmonton.

The companies filed their application with the Alberta Utilities Commission last Tuesday estimating that the transmission line will cost $580 million.

This is the first project proposed as a result of the passage of the controversial Bill 50, The Electric Statutes Amendment Act.

Bill 50 eliminated the regulatory process that determined whether or not a transmission line was needed or warranted.

Critics at the time claimed the elimination of the regulatory process could lead to unnecessary projects and the doubling and tripling of electricity bills. Much of this was dismissed by the proponents of Bill 50.

The Heartland project application submitted last Tuesday is now projected to cost 93 per cent more than the anticipated $300 million previously claimed by the Alberta government. Critics claim the 93 per cent increase, if it remains universal and does not increase further, will raise the overall proposals recommended by the Alberta Electric System Operator over the next 10 years to $32 billion. This is a 16,000 per cent increase over the value of the existing grid, which is currently estimated to be valued at $2 billion.

To put this in perspective, a 16,000 per cent increase in Alberta's road infrastructure would increase the average two-lane highway in Alberta to 32 lanes wide. Using the same factor of 16, the QEII from Edmonton to Calgary would increase to 64 lanes wide. A 16,000 per cent increase in Alberta's educational system would see the $31.4 million invested in students every school day rise to $502.40 per day. A 16,000 per cent increase in Alberta's electricity grid is more than double the value of what Alberta budgets annually for health care!

Critics warn that if transmission charges, generally found on page two or three of an electric bill, rise by 16,000 per cent over the next 10 years, the average household in Alberta will see its electricity bills triple, and many small businesses (commercial businesses pay a much higher rate) will see their electricity bills rise by a factor of five times. The impact of such a whopping increase could in effect extinguish many small businesses, devastate local communities, and put into jeopardy many jobs in Alberta.

The solution is to roll back the clock on Bill 50 and repeal it. Evaluate each and every proposal to build a transmission line on the basis that it is needed and required by the public now, and in the future. After all, the public is paying for it!

Proud to acknowledge fire prevention efforts

As Alberta's representative to the Canadian Association of Fire Chiefs, I am proud to acknowledge the efforts of fire departments and elementary schools across the province during Fire Prevention Week from Oct. 3-9.

I'm appealing to all parents to support your youngsters when they come home excited to help make your home more fire safe by participating in the "The Great Canadian Fire Drill."

Throughout October, children in Grades K-3 will be taught how to create and practise a home fire escape plan. Plus, classes and families can win valuable home safety prizes from our public education partners Scholastic, Duracell and Kidde Canada!

Help Alberta be a leader in "The Great Canadian Fire Drill." Please register your support at www.safeathome.ca/drill. Complete your family escape plan, practise it, then print out your personalized "We Did The Drill" certificate!

Remember these family fire safety tips:

1. Install smoke alarms on every storey of your home and outside sleeping areas

2. Install fresh batteries in smoke and CO alarms at least once per year

3. Replace ALL smoke alarms over 10 years old - battery operated and hard-wired

4. Never tamper with smoke alarms

Thank you for helping prevent fire tragedies in Didsbury.

Scare tactics not necessary in water debate

BEN EISEN

Recently, John Carey, a former executive at Environment Canada and top expert on water policy addressed an international conference in Montreal and explained that, scare campaigns to the contrary, Canada is in no danger of running out of freshwater. Carey's comments provide a useful starting point for a reorientation of policy discourse away from emotional scare tactics and towards the development of rational strategies for managing Canada's water.

Millions of dollars have been spent on public relations campaigns designed to frighten Canadians and make us feel guilty about using water. For example, Karen Kun of an organization called Waterlution has suggested that it is "unfair" of Canadians to use more water than people in other countries, and that a "water crisis" looms if we persist in our overconsumption. While it is true that per capita water use in Canada is high by international standards, Carey is correct in stating that Canada has far more freshwater than its population is ever likely to use. While Canada makes up just one half of one percent of the world's population, our country contains 20 per cent of the world's freshwater, and seven per cent of all renewable freshwater resources.

The abundance of Canada's water compared to the small needs of its population can be understood by considering that total freshwater withdrawals each year represent less than two per cent of the country's annual supply of renewable freshwater. By comparison, Canada's NAFTA trading partners, the United States and Mexico, withdraw 17 and 19 per cent respectively. Many countries withdraw a much larger percentage of their renewable freshwater—Germany withdraws 40 per cent each year. These numbers confirm Carey's assertion that Canada is not in danger of exhausting its freshwater supplies.

Of course there are regions of the country where water is scarce and which sometimes experience severe droughts. The notion, however, that a national effort at water austerity is required to prevent Canada from "running out of water" is not supported by the facts.

None of this is to say that high level of water consumption is harmless. Carey also pointed out that there are other costs associated with water usage, such as the energy required to treat water and pump it into taps. Canada's high level of water use requires the consumption of significant energy resources that could otherwise be used elsewhere in the economy or conserved for the future.

The problem is that Canadians are largely insulated from these costs by policies that subsidize the use of water, and create incentives for overconsumption. One egregious example is flat rate water pricing, which still exists in many communities, under which consumers are charged the same fees no matter how much water they use.

The simplest way to ensure that people take all of the relevant costs into account when they make decisions about water consumption is to require them to pay the full cost of processing and delivering the water they use. By charging consumers the full cost of delivering and processing water, we can ensure that individuals bear the costs of consuming lots of water as well as enjoying the benefits. Under these conditions, we can be confident that rational, self-interested decision making will result in the efficient allocation of energy resources, with the appropriate amount being spent on the delivery of water and the appropriate amount remaining available for other purposes.

While targeted subsidies should be used to ensure that low-income Canadians have access to the water they need, there is no reason to shield most Canadians from the full cost of the water they use. This just leads to market distortions and economic inefficiencies—such as overconsumption and the accompanying high levels of energy usage pointed out by John Carey.

Too often, discourse about water policy in Canada is dominated by emotional appeals rather than rational argument. There is no need to scare Canadians with false claims that we are running out of water, or guilt trip them with charges of intergenerational irresponsibility. Instead, we can reduce water use to the appropriate level by simply charging individuals and consumers the full price of water—and then letting them decide how much they want to consume.

Letter to the editor Single desk marketing vote nearing

The time has come when the wheat and barley producers of Western Canada will again be voting if they wish to retain the single desk (The Canadian Wheat Board - CWB) as their marketer or perhaps the majority will vote to turn that function over to the corporate grain trade.

At the time the Harper government came to power, the corporate grain trade had high hopes the CWB would be dismantled.

This may be an appropriate time to remind the producers of wheat and barley just why the multinationals want to get their hands on western wheat and barley marketing.

This is how the Western Producer reported the corporate position on the front page at that time: "An expectation the new federal government will end the Canadian Wheat Board single desk and perhaps reduce its role in transportation logistics which could translate into higher profits for grain handlers."

Question—If the grain companies get the chance to suck more profits out of grain marketing, guess who will get less?

FIRE PREVENTION WEEK 2010

Message from the AEMA Managing Director This week all about getting the word out

Fire Prevention Week is an opportunity for us to reach out to Albertans with information about how to prevent fires and how to stay safe.

In Alberta, there is roughly 1,500 home fires reported each year to the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. These fires kill an average of 20 people and injure an additional 165. They cost approximately $93 million in direct property loss.

The Alberta Emergency Management Agency's mandate is to protect people, their property and the environment from emergency events.

The theme of this year's Fire Prevention Week - Smoke Alarms: A sound you can live with. It reminds people that something as simple as installing and testing smoke alarms can prevent injuries and limit property damage. If a fire does ignite, having a working smoke alarm and a proper escape plan will help ensure that everyone gets out safely.

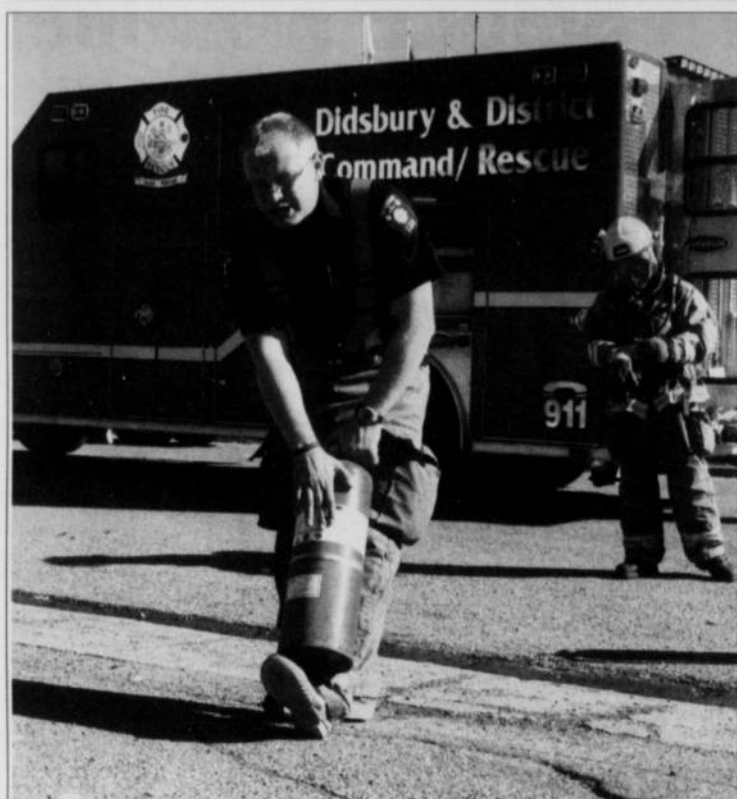

We can also make small changes that will prevent a fire in the first place. Simple, common sense actions such as keeping portable heaters away from bedding or curtains, paying attention while cooking, and blowing out candles before you leave the house will help prevent fires.

Practicing fire safety will protect your family, friends and neighbours, and the emergency responders dispatched during fire emergencies. Together we can reduce the number of fires and fire-related tragedies.

E. David Hodgins
Managing Director Alberta
Emergency Management

BE PREPARED - A member of the Didsbury & District Fire Department explains how to properly use a fire extinguisher and where they should be located throughout the house during a demonstration at the fire hall Saturday.

A history of keeping Albertans fire-safe

Fire Prevention Week, just like the fire service itself, has a long and proud history.

It was established to commemorate the Great Chicago Fire of 1871. This tragic conflagration killed more than 250 people, left 100,000 homeless, and destroyed more than 17,400 structures.

Every year, fire educators across Canada bring important safety messages during Fire Prevention Week to their communities to help prevent fires, injuries, and deaths.

The Alberta Emergency Management Agency (AEMA), in partnership with emergency services, recognizes Fire Prevention Week as an important awareness campaign that teaches Albertans about fire prevention and safety.

During the five year period between 2003 and 2007, there was an average of 5,300 fires reported each year. These fires resulted in an average of 30 deaths, 260 injuries and approximately $334 million in property loss.

Most fire deaths and injuries happen in places where Albertans feel the safest, their homes. Thirty-three per cent of all fires occur in the home and 70 per cent of all fire deaths.

Careless smoking is the number one cause of home fire deaths. Unattended cooking is the number one cause of home fire injuries.

FIRE PREVENTION WEEK 2010

Firefighting a worthwhile job

BY LEA SMALDON
Review Staff

Being on the Didsbury fire department has reinforced Curtis Mousseau's resolve that prevention can stop the devastating effects of fire.

"Smoke detectors do save lives," says Mousseau, a volunteer firefighter on the Didsbury department.

The sentiment isn't just Mousseau's. It's actually this year's theme of Fire Prevention Week.

But it's also a slogan the Didsbury Fire Department lives by. For years, a sign noting those exact words has been displayed on the outside of the fire hall in large letters.

"It's common sense. If you're alerted, you can get out. Otherwise it may be too late," said Mousseau.

The five-year veteran of the department grew up intimately knowing the effects of fire and prevention methods, with the help of his father.

Rick Mousseau has been fire chief of the department since 1994.

The younger Mousseau said he most likely joined the volunteer fire department because of his dad's involvement.

"Probably because I saw the camaraderie in the department and the fact that we can help make a difference," said Mousseau, adding it is an extremely rewarding experience.

Department members not only get called to provide firefighting and prevention activities, they also go on calls for medic-assist, alarms, and accidents.

Mousseau said one of the most memorable moments on the job was being on scene of a house trailer fire on Hwy. 2A just north of Didsbury in recent years.

"It was really unfortunate. I remember a dog was trapped (in the trailer) and you could just hear him howling," Mousseau said.

That sound has been unforgettable, he said.

FIRE PREVENTION WEEK 2010

Which alarm is better?

An ionization smoke alarm is generally more responsive to smoke from flaming fires like a flaming pan fire.

A photoelectric alarm is generally more responsive to smoke from smoldering fires like cigarette igniting a slow burning fire on a sofa cushion.

Laboratory tests indicate that either alarm is equally effective in the home. Many household fires produce detectable amounts of both visible and invisible smoke. Either detector will provide suitable warning for a safe escape from a fire emergency.

You may choose to install one of each type of smoke alarm in the home. This is recommended by the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. Dual ionization/photo-electric alarms, which combine both technologies in one alarm, are available.

Ensure your smoke alarm has been tested and labeled by an independent testing laboratory such as Underwriters Laboratories of Canada (cUL). This ensures the product is certified for the Canadian market, and to the applicable Canadian standard.

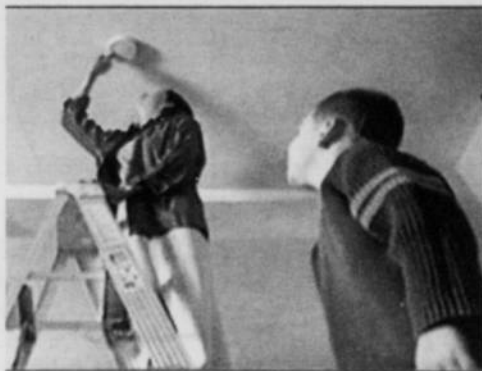

Hard of hearing?

People who are hard of hearing should use smoke alarms with strobe lights.

Make sure that the alarm you are using has been tested and certified by an independent testing laboratory (such as ULC).

The alarms for sleeping areas with strobe lights are required to be of a special high intensity that can wake a sleeping person.

Most major smoke alarm companies offer alarms with strobe lights.

Proper installation important

To ensure your family is alerted to any smoke or fire danger, follow the guidelines below when installing smoke alarms in your home.

- Install smoke alarms on every level of your home, including the basement. For added safety, install smoke alarms inside bedrooms.
- Mount smoke alarms high on walls or on ceilings.
- Avoid installing smoke alarms near windows, doors or air ducts where drafts.
- Always follow manufacturer's instructions when installing a smoke alarm.

In larger or multi-storey homes, the sound of a distant smoke alarm may not be loud enough to provide a proper warning, especially for sleeping individuals. That is why interconnected smoke alarms are highly recommended. This ensures that when one smoke alarm sounds, they all do. A licensed electrician can install hardwired multi-station alarms. Wireless alarms, which manufacturers have recently started producing, can be installed by the homeowner.

Special features available

Many smoke alarm models now come equipped with enhanced features including:

Hush buttons: This feature allows you to temporarily silence the smoke alarm in the event of a nuisance alarm such as cooking fumes. Pressing the hush button automatically switches the alarm to a reduced sensitivity condition for a limited period of time. If a real fire occurs, and the quantity of smoke reaching the smoke alarm is sufficient, the alarm will sound.

10-Year Lithium Batteries: Alarms that use these batteries can operate for up to 10 years without requiring a change of battery.

Escape Light: When the smoke alarm sounds, an escape light is also activated, helping you to exit the area.

Alarms with Strobe Lights: Some alarms are equipped with strobe lights to alert people who are deaf or hard of hearing. You can also choose tactile notification appliances, such as a pillow or bed shaker, which are activated by the sound of the smoke alarm.

Combination Alarms: A combination alarm combines a smoke alarm and carbon monoxide alarm in one unit.

Remote Controlled Testing Buttons: No need to climb up on a ladder—smoke alarms with remote controlled testing buttons allow you to use most standard TV/VCR remote controls to test your smoke alarm.

Fire dept. holds open house

The Didsbury & District Fire Department held an open house Saturday to kick off Fire Prevention Week 2010 which runs from Oct. 3-9.

TOP - Department members conducted a demonstration on proper fire extinguisher use using the PASS method - pull, aim, squeeze, shoot.

ABOVE RIGHT - Youngsters and their parents took tours of the fire department and left with grab bags full of fire prevention week activities and promotional items.

RIGHT - Fire department members demonstrate using a dummy, how they move a patient onto a backboard after extricating it from underneath a vehicle. Members used a tool called an air bag to help lift the vehicle off the fake patient during Saturday's open house.

Teens rummage, steal

Four Didsbury teens were caught rummaging through and stealing items from unlocked cars in town.

The group, two girls and two boys between the ages of 15 and 17, stole as much as $900 from one vehicle as well as GPS locators, iPods, wallets, identification sunglasses, cellphones and CDs from others.

The areas they hit included West Point Drive, West Heights Drive, 23rd Street, 7th Avenue, Meadow View Court and South Ridge Place.

Police say between 80 and 100 vehicles were rummaged through. Items of value were discovered from the teens upon arrest. Numerous charges will be placed against two teens while the other two will be sent before youth justice.

"Those who leave their doors unlocked are presenting crimes of opportunity," said Sgt. Jeff Jacobson. "Don't keep valuables in your vehicles."

Break and enter at Snappy's

A break and enter into Snappy's Sign and Graphic Emporium occurred sometime between 7:50 p.m. September 28th and 8:30 a.m. September 29. The door had been tampered with as well as wires on an alarm system. Several toolboxes were gone and a fridge was rummaged through. A trailer that had been parked outside was missing from the scene but later turned up abandoned on the roadside. Police are investigating with Red Deer Forensic Identification unit and are looking into a break and enter that occurred at another business in the past to see if there's any overlaps.

Drug seizure at business

On September 26 RCMP went into a business for a licensed premise check in Didsbury and interrupted a drug transaction in the men's bathroom.

Calvin Wright, 23, of Didsbury is facing charges for trafficking ecstasy and possession of one gram of cannabis marijuana. He had 11 ecstasy tablets on him. He will appear before Didsbury provincial court October 4.

Election signs vandalized

Police received reports early last week that election signs are going missing as well as a couple of stands. Police say this typically happens around election time but if someone is found taking or damaging signs in any form they potentially face mischief and theft charges.

Fence damage

A fence was damaged on a property on the 500 block of Macintosh Drive in Carstairs on Sept. 27 between 9:30 a.m. and 6:20 p.m. Police suspect it was struck by a vehicle but no other information is known at this time.

Safety first on the road

October is occupant restraint month and RCMP are asking the public to wear their seatbelts and make sure child seats are properly placed. Fines for not wearing a seatbelt total $115. Between October 8 and 11 is Operation Impact where RCMP will focus on impaired drivers, seatbelt use and aggressive driving. There will be increased enforcement watching out for this over the Thanksgiving weekend.

Fraud alert

Police have been receiving complaints about a mass marketing fraud turning up on fax machines. Police advise people receiving these faxes to contract phonebusters.com

Didsbury & District Chamber of Commerce

HAVE YOU GOT YOUR TICKETS YET!!

The nominations are in and on October 16th the awards for Small Business of the Year, New Business of the Year, and Not for Profit Society of the Year will be awarded. The nominees for Small Business of the Year are: Didsbury Value Drug Mart, Gil's Truck and Auto, House of Hair, The Green Bamboo Restaurant, and Victoria's Flowers & Gifts. The Nominees for Not for Profit Society of the Year are: Didsbury Elks & Didsbury & District Historical Society. Congratulations to all and the best of luck! We received only one nomination for New Business of the year and that was A Ray of Insite who has been declared the winner by acclamation. Don't miss the final announcement, be there to congratulate the winners!

This event is open to everyone, but for the local businesses it is a great way to say "Thank-You" to your staff for their hard work and support throughout the year. Use it as an evening out or perhaps your staff Christmas party. This is a great evening with the presentation of the Small Business Week awards along with a fantastic dinner, a fun silent auction (with partial proceeds going to Peer Support Services for Abused Women), and an evening of comedy and magic performed by Sheldon Casavant. Tickets are available from Deana Campbell at the Chamber office, 403-335-3265, or e-mail at info@didsburychamber.ca. Don't be disappointed, CALL NOW!

Child Porn

Krasman warns the consequences of children posting naked pictures or videos of themselves is far more severe than they might realize.

"Once you send it out in the internet it's basically gone to the wild. It's like a dandelion being blown to the wind, you don't know where those little pieces of the dandelion have gone, there's no way to capture it. That's what happens when you send naked picture of yourself to people you don't know. You absolutely cannot control it. It's gone wild." She said employers use social networking sites to find more information about potential employees and photos kids take of themselves now can come back to haunt them when they're looking for a job when they're older. She also warns of legal trouble kids are getting themselves into.

"If you are making your own child pornography and you're under 18 years of age you are committing an offence. It is making child pornography. And if you send it to somebody you are now distributing child pornography. And then the person you sent it to. They are now in possession of it. If they send it on, they're now distributing it. Like I say, it's a virus gone wild."

In the sexting example, the girl and boy aren't facing charges and the webcam case is still under investigation but police say they are treating the girl as a victim. Police explain deciding when to lay charges on children producing or distributing child pornography is determined case by case.

"If they were personally profiting from it, if they were an underage porn star or something we would look into laying a charge," explained Cpl. Warren Wright. "It's one of those things where it's case by case. Sometimes it's in consultation with the crown prosecutor to determine if they will proceed with a charge." He explained that in the sexting case police were trying to approach it from an educational standpoint.

"It was dealt with by way of stern warning and we're hoping to educate these children. It's not in the public interest to lay charges," he said.

The girl who was making videos of herself is being considered a victim because police believe it was a matter of manipulation and coercion. Investigators with Integrated Child Exploitation Team in Calgary are trying to determine who has been receiving the videos.

Police still need to track the online presence to a person before they can determine who the person is that received the videos from the Didsbury teen and whether or not the video has been distributed elsewhere.

On October 16 the Carstairs Community Resource Centre is offering a cyber safe program for children ages 8 to 11 that focuses on how to be safe online. On October 23, A Girl's Way, a self-esteem workshop for children and teens 12-15 will run.

"I think that will be another layer of letting the girls know that there are risks and temptation out there to expose yourself in inappropriate ways" explained Bowman. "If you're uncomfortable it's possible to understand there's consequences and there's other ways to feel confident and feel healthy and not make those choices," she said.

Didsbury Neighborhood Place currently isn't offering any programs but manager of community services in Didsbury, Nicole Aasen, said it's something they would consider.

"If it's something that's been identified in Didsbury as a problem then Neighborhood Place would, you know, look at pursuing some programming to assist with it," she said.

Jackson WI update

On Sept. 14, our meeting was held at the Cremona Gold and Silver with 15 members and three visitors, Maxine Rigsby, Jo Hutchinson and Donna Steeves.

President Dorit Bird read an article on aprons and how they have been used in the past.

Our Roll Call was to tell a story about our grandmothers. The stories were many and varied, from refined to unbending, parcels of knitted dresses from Norway, making dandelion wine, one who would roll her own cigarettes, another who took granddaughters to the Ice Capades in Edmonton, one who didn't know how to cook and so took a course at the Y.W.C.A. and a recollection that her grandmother always smelled of lavender and eucalyptus and who told that you had to practice all your life to be a nice old lady.

The minutes and treasurer's report were adopted as read.

A letter was read from the provincial president reminding us that resolutions for next year's convention must be in by Dec. 31.

We received a letter from "In The North" thanking us for the mitts and toques we had sent. Some blankets will be sent and they could use more but must be to Donna Steeves before Oct. 6. It was suggested that a small note on each blanket or toques would be a nice personal gesture.

Noreen Olson told us about the Eagle Valley W.I. Tea that several members attended and she read a poem she had written in 1984 called "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" about women's lives and attendance at W.I. meetings.

We made 35 apple pies last year for Winterfest and it was decided that we would do this again this year.

The Nominating Committee for the coming year is Judy Bellamy and Mary Thomson. We need nominations for secretary and convenors.

Phyllis Bricker gave her report about the Associated Country Women of the World (A.W.C.C.). The conference in Arkansas was successful with a good number of Canadian delegates. The new President is Mary Kidd from Scotland. One of the concerns was with the financial climate of the world, another was to end the danger to women all over the world. The money we sent to Pennies for Friendship is used in international work. It was suggested that at Winterfest we could have a display of the worldwide use that is made of Pennies for Friendship and a donation box.

Marie Olson had the Bit of Fun- some puzzles that stumped most of us.

Think fast.

Not everyone has time to preplan a funeral. But the peace of mind knowing that all of the decisions have already been made can be both financially and emotionally beneficial.

We're pleased to say that preplanning only takes a few minutes, and can be done at your convenience. If you have any questions, please call, you'll be glad you did.

Friesen, Fred

May 28, 1937 - September 22, 2010

Fred Friesen, of Didsbury, Alberta, beloved husband of Doris, was released from his earthly body to be with his Saviour on September 22, 2010 after a short battle with aggressive thyroid cancer. Fred pursued and served God his whole life. Born to a farming family in Rosenort, MB, he married Doris in 1960 and shortly after set out on a journey to serve God together as pioneer missionaries in Mexico and Nicaragua. These years were full of trials, joys, and adventures, and formed the basis of his subsequent ministries and outlook on life. Forced return to Canada in 1974 for medical reasons, he pastored his hometown church for five years. Feeling the call to train young people, he obtained a Master's Degree in Missiology, and moved to Didsbury, AB where he taught missions and cross-cultural studies at Mountain View Bible College. In 1992 they moved to Calgary where Fred continued teaching at Rocky Mountain College. A debilitating stroke in 1999 forced his retirement after 18 years of teaching. After a move back to Didsbury, he showed great courage and tenacity in battling back from his stroke. He remained involved in missions and mentoring young men. Fred and Doris celebrated their 50th anniversary four weeks before he passed away.

Fred is remembered for his warm personality, his integrity, his great sense of humour, his sense of adventure, and his genuine care for others. He will be greatly missed by his loving wife, Doris, his daughters Kathy (Bruce Archer) and Trish (John Pritchard), and sons David (Leslie) and James (Jennifer), as well as 13 grandchildren and one great grandson. A Celebration of Life was held at Zion Evangelical Missionary Church in Didsbury, AB, on Monday, September 27th. If you wish, you can make a donation in memory of Fred to the Romanian Leadership Development Project through Zion Evangelical Missionary Church. Please address these donations to: ZEMC Missions (Romania Project), Box 686, Didsbury, AB, T0M 0W0.

GIBSON - Evelyn May (nee Best) October 5, 1921 - October 1, 2010
